DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

Claim 8 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention. Claim 8 requires the structure of the fastener of claim 1 in line 9 after having already recited portions of the structure of the fastener of claim 1. It is therefore unclear whether the shaft, for example, of line 3 of claim 8 is required in addition to the shaft included within the limitations of claim 1.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

Claims 1-5, 8, 11 and 12 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Törmälä et al. (WO99/49792). Törmälä et al. teach a fastener having a shaft 1 comprising a proximal portion 2 with a tapered, curved end and a distal portion 3 having protrusions 4 with proximal surfaces for arresting movement of the shaft in the proximal direction and distal surfaces to permit the movement of the shaft in the distal direction. Furthermore, the protrusions 4 may protrude from longitudinal ridges R extending along the length of the shaft 1 as shown in Fig. 3A. The fastener "may be manufactured of a polymer or a polymeric compound which is substantially (bio)absorbable (resorbable) after implantation in tissue and contains an oriented reinforcing structure or the like of a polymer or polymeric compound or ceramic bioactive glass compound." A method for using the fastener to repair a torn meniscus is depicted in Figs. 8A-8D and 9-11 and shows the fastener as being completely within the meniscus. In such a position, the proximal surface of the proximal portion 2 would resist proximal movement of the fastener.

Claims 7, 9 and 10 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Hart et al. (US 5,843,084). Hart et al. teach a surgical fastening system including a fastener 5 including a shaft 10 comprising a proximal portion 35 with a tapered, curved end 60 and a distal portion 30 having protrusions 40 with proximal surfaces 50 configured to arrest the movement of the shaft in the proximal direction and distal surfaces 45 configured to permit the movement of the shaft in the distal direction. In the procedure illustrated in Figs. 24-28, the fastener is inserted across a rupture in a meniscus and the only the curved end of the fastener is positioned on the surface of the meniscus. An alternate embodiment of the fastener is depicted in Figs. 33 & 34 and is used in a procedure to secure a mesh to tissue wherein the tapered curved end contacts the mesh.

Claim 6 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated Tormala et al. (WO 99/01071) by Tormala et al. (WO 99/01071). Tormala et al. teach fastener having a shaft 1 comprising a proximal portion 2 with a tapered, curved end and a distal portion

3 having protrusions 4 with proximal surfaces for arresting movement of the shaft in the proximal direction and distal surfaces to permit the movement of the shaft in the distal direction. As shown in Fig. 5, the curved, tapered proximal end also may include protuberances having proximal surfaces configured to arrest the movement of the shaft in the proximal direction.

Conclusion

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure. Lin et al. and Feagin et al. have been cited to show closely related surgical fasteners which include features to reduce the possibility of the fasteners backing out.
